Since the problem with the wrong download URL of the crack, or something went wrong in the process of downloading, I would like to use this method to download my.txt file. A: I can reproduce the problem with your website. Browser behavior I'm on Firefox v. 51.1.0 in windows 10, but I think it's the same for chrome, opera and other browsers. Right click on a link and open with in firefox. You'll see it has a green URL at the top of the status bar : After clicking on 'download', you'll see the hashbang (#!) at the end of the link is replaced by a correctly downloaded file. But the file download doesn't include the.txt extension. Status bar changes As expected (see the answer from @AndrewConnelly), the hashbang in the status bar is changed from #! to #. (green URL) But it's still not the right file. Why? This is due to a security mechanism, and the hashbang is a nice way to say "I don't care what the real URL is, I want to download this file!" The real URL is in fact ". Which is a valid link, but it's not the real one, because the file doesn't end with.zip. Firefox can't download it because the file is not what it's looking for. Links that are supposed to download a file are in fact manipulated in the background by some server. When the server receives a request to download a file, it manipulates the link, and replacing the hashbang with the file extension, if the file end with.zip. Server behavior You can view the response from the server on the Network tab in the browser (see : It's still the same trick as for normal links, see answer from @AndrewConnelly. My solution As I wrote in the answer from @AndrewConnelly, I use another
